

JEWISH CEMETERY OF HARBURG (BAVARIA)

GRAVELIST VERSION 2 (April 2020)

central burial ground since 1671 for Jewish families of Harburg, Ederheim and Moenchsdeggingen (Moenchsdeggingen had a cemetery of its own 1833-1880, Ederheim never had one) researched and compiled by Rolf Hofmann, in cooperation with Mario (Meir) Jacoby + Ruth Litai-Jacoby (as sources are not always 100% reliable, errors might be inevitable despite careful research efforts)

additional help was provided by Dr Joachim Hahn

This documentation started in 1992, when Mario Jacoby cleaned all of Harburg's Jewish grave monuments and took fotos with the help of Rolf Hofmann. This extensive project was the first of its kind in the Swabian part of Bavaria, and so was the privately organized and unsponsored publication of 50 of the 269 grave monuments, completed with the transcription of Hebrew grave inscriptions and their German translation. In 2007 this documentation and its publication is still unique and outstanding for the Swabian part of Bavaria.

This cemetery was used as a burial ground for 267 years (1671-1938). According to a newspaper record in 1902 then there were still 500 existing grave markers, and therefore it's strange that only 269 grave monuments have survived, practically none of those which were placed before 1800. After 1800 the number of deceased of the Jewish communities in Harburg, Moenchsdeggingen and Ederheim was approximately 1100 (including children, who rarely got markers before 1850). The number of those who died before 1800 was at least another 600 (including children). So altogether there should be more than 500 grave monuments of adult persons. The discrepancy between the actual amount of headstones and the number that should be there leads to the speculation, that quite a few grave markers were taken away by vandals during the course of history. This fact goes for soldiers before 1800 who burned at campfires all of the wooden markers which then were common instead of headstones. But this goes also for vandalism during the 1930s and towards the end of World War II, when Hitler minded youngsters overthrew headstones and also took away a reasonable amount of them. Ernst Ruff, a local historian, took pictures in these days, showing the woeful situation of this cemetery with its knocked over headstones. But despite its lacking wooden grave markers and headstones this cemetery with its trees and peaceful atmosphere in visual range of medieval Harburg castle still is a good place to worship the memory of the Jewish families who had once populated this part of the historic County of Oettingen with its Counts and Princes, who not only took taxes from their Jewish subjects but also supported them in organizing their social needs in harmony.

FOR FAMILY NAME INDEX SEE END OF GRAVELIST
